If serviced apartments tend to be anonymous and decorated in a way that suggests they could be anywhere, this small, newly opened, 1930s style atmospheric development in Causeway Bay is unmistakably in China: all fretwork screens, faux-Ming furniture, lots of red lanterns and, inevitably, the odd bust of Mao. It has pretty balconies and all the modern amenities needed by the busy traveller.

Three blocks in Hong Kong that offer you not just a temporary home, but a lifestyle – indeed something called a Kush Envy card, which gets you in to the “coolest spots in town” – to go with it. They're also keen to push their green agenda, which is admirable in many ways, though the tone is a little wearily admonishing. Still, they do provide tenants with a shopping bag to discourage them from accepting plastic ones, and their special “Eco Kettles” ensure you boil only the “right amount of hot water without wasting a drop”.
